

This game is played exactly like the original Salute, but instead of two players and a judge, there are three to four players and a judge. Each group will need a deck of cards, with face cards removed.

Have the players face each other and the judge deals out one card face down to each player. When the judge says “salute” all the players put their cards on their foreheads, and the judge will either say the sum or the product of all the cards.

The first player to figure out their card wins that round.

Make sure that all players state their own card value — not just the player who won the round.

MATERIALS:

- Decks of cards

NOTE: Multiplication among three or four players might prove challenging for some groups. If so, limit the cards in the deck to numbers 1 through 5.

